Message from the ESPON Coordination Unit:

The Territorial Dimension of the Europe 2020 Strategy

The contribution of European territories, regions and cities to the Europe 2020 Strategy was the focus of the Open Seminar "ESPON Evidence for Regional Policy-Making" on 9 - 10 June 2010 in Alcalá de Henares - Madrid. In cooperation with the Spanish EU Presidency, ESPON brought more than 200 key policy makers, scientists and experts together for dialogue, based on new facts and evidence provided by ESPON projects, on the territorial dimension and development potentials related to the Europe 2020 Strategy.

Regions and cities all over Europe play an important role in making the Europe 2020 Strategy a success. Understanding its territorial dimensions and potential contributions from European regions and cities raises a number of important questions for policy makers:

- Is a better balanced and polycentric European territory the political objective?
- How can we the best make use of the existing territorial diversity within Europe?
- Which types of regions have what opportunities to contribute to smart, sustainable and inclusive growth?
- Should particular places and cities play a special functional role in integrating Europe in the World?

Conclusions of the Seminar are in preparation and will be published in a special report which will be soon available at the ESPON Website.

Several key messages came out from the roundtable with policy makers:

- "The Europe 2020 Strategy should be the framework for growth for all EU Regions";
- "Regions are key for the fulfillment of the Europe 2020 Strategy and should be much stronger involved in defining the deliveries";
- "European Macro-Regions should be part of the strategy implementation";
- "The 2020 Strategy should take into account not only the GDP, but also use new indicators, measuring the quality of life and the sustainability of the growth".

The European process has started defining more territorial policy responses in support of the Europe 2020 Strategy. This should continue as territory and place-based approaches matters for its success. The functionality and design of the European territory has impact on European competitiveness and on long-term sustainable living conditions for the Europeans.

ESPON will support this European policy development bringing in new facts and evidence with a European perspective.

ESPON Results and Reports

ReRISK - The Draft Final Report is now online

ESPON ReRISK - Regions at Risk of Energy Poverty has delivered its Draft Final Report. By looking at the impact the energy prices have on the competitiveness and cohesion, regions with similar characteristics have been identified in order to address them by a common set of policies.

The policy recommendations have also taken into account the long-term planning framework in the energy sector, which is described in four qualitative scenarios. Further input was obtained from a survey of 40 regional administrations, from the case studies carried out in several EU regions (Samsø/Denmark, Navarra/Spain, Kalundborg and Landskrona/Sweden and Freiburg/Germany) and from relevant EU policy documents.

In addition to the Draft Final Report, it is of interest to read the discussion paper on impacts of climate change on regional energy systems, which is one of the annexes of the Updated Interim Report and has been elaborated in cooperation with the ESPON Climate Project. It is assumed that climate change will in general lead to more extreme weather conditions, putting additional pressure on the energy infrastructure in terms of production, transport and distribution. Among other finding, the discussion paper shows expected climate change impacts on energy production as well as demand. Also policy options are proposed to minimize the possible risks on regional level.

ESPON ReRISK, produced by Innobasque as Lead Partner, Nordregio - Nordic Centre for Spatial Development and National Technical University of Athens as Project Partners shall deliver its Final Report on 31 July 2010.
